

Hi! My name is Andrew Gonzalez! I am an Assistant Professor and Director of the Political Science Program at LMU. I am the primary instructor for political science courses at LMU, and teach the majority of political science courses offered. I am also serving as the pre-law advisor for any LMU students interested in going to law school. From a research perspective, I study the relationship between peoples' financial and economic concerns and how these influence how they interact with politics. From a teaching side, I enjoy teaching courses in American politics and comparative politics. I also serve as a student advisor for incoming Political Science majors and am interested in working with students in any research or study projects they may have related to politics. In my free time, I enjoy reading, writing, astronomy, analyzing political polls, and video gaming.