

Dr. Martin P. Sellers is the Dean of the Paul V. Hamilton School of Arts, Humanities, and Social Sciences. He received a BA in Political Science and Public Administration from the College of New Jersey, a Master's in Public Administration (MPA) from New York University and a PhD in Political Science from Temple University in Philadelphia. His career path has led him to the United States Air Force and then back home to the U. S. Department of Agriculture as a program evaluator, inner-city health program director, and assistant bureau chief with the Department of Law and Public Safety with the State of New Jersey. He was appointed Dean of the Undergraduate College and the College of Arts and Sciences at Lincoln Memorial University in 2002, then Vice President for Academic Affairs at College of Saint Mary in 2006 and on to Cox College in Springfield, Missouri as VPAA and VP for Student Services until 2011. He returned to LMU as Dean of Research and Service in the fall of 2011 and was subsequently appointed as Dean of the School of Arts, Humanities, and Social Sciences in 2012. His academic interests are in the areas of state and local government, special district government, and prison education. He is currently working working on projects regarding differences between MBA and MPA degrees, local government collaboration, and prison recidivism.
